Because the demands when choosing a career for a job search and application are high: the dream job in Spe should be interesting and exciting, but at the same time secure and with good earnings prospects. But young people in particular often orient themselves towards role models, their own parents or what is forecast as job prospects on the labor market when choosing a career. However, that can change faster than you think; Fixed career paths that are prescribed by vocational training are becoming increasingly rare, and the content of many training courses can hardly keep up with technological progress. Therefore, you should reflect on your own talents and abilities and thus positively highlight the undreamed-of potential of your own strengths in the application process. In this way, you may find a dream job that you never thought of and you can always adapt flexibly to an ever faster changing job market, which is also an advantage if you want to reorient yourself later in life. This book shows the opportunities and possibilities in the dream job search as well as obstacles and thus helps to find the right way.

Why you should first look for the job and then the training path: Where is the dream job?

// By Tom Diesbrock

Many people looking for a job make a fundamental mistake: instead of looking for an interesting job that suits their abilities, that is, their own dream job, they focus on a specific occupation or degree program. In my opinion, this is a classic self-in-knee-shot technique - and I want to explain why:

Abi - and then?

I met today a friend of mine, a young woman, we call her Paula, whom I had met in the spring on a hike. The conversation soon came to her professional situation, which is anything but rosy:

Paula has been holding her Abi for two years and still does not know where to go her professional journey. She keeps up with jobs, but becomes more and more unhappy, because she wants to do something she wants and continues.

Doctor yes, but please without patients!

Paula had applied in the summer for a place to study medicine and received a rejection. Now she told me about her thoughts about studying in Budapest. I asked her (as is my nature) what she wanted to do after graduation.

She wanted to become a doctor, but not look after patients on a long-term basis, so no people who were too old, she could imagine sports medicine - or anesthesia, because that has something to do with technology and biology, which interests her, and it is not with so much patient contact connected...

Study selection without professional presentation

That struck me. In their view of the doctor's profession, people did not seem to be the decisive factor. Would it be closer to study something technical, pharmaceutical or biological? Hmm, yes, there's something there.

But Paula could also imagine studying psychology, only that the necessary cut was stupidly too high. And what did she want to do with it? She hadn't really thought about that either. "What about teenagers, maybe with behavioral problems".

Many ways lead to the goal

When I had been bungled, and she had thought about it for a while, a picture of how she wanted to look after young people in camps, which would otherwise
